savings of ₹57,000 crore.

Still, the overall subsidy bill of the government is not falling. Modi's initiative to boost liquefied petroleum gas usage in rural areas and provide subsidised food to a widening pool already reeling under rural distress has ...ensured it remains high.

"Commodity prices are going up and there's a risk that the oil bill will rise quite sharply," Raghbendra Jha, an economics professor at the Australian National University, said by phone. "The government will like to play safe before elections and increase subsidies that will test the fiscal deficit."
