Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine whether there were differences in the prevalence of risk factors for low back pain between two groups of nurses working in different departments. A cross-sectional study was conducted in a tertiary-level hospital in Mexico City. Two groups of nurses were selected from the intensive care unit (ICU) and the medical-surgical department. Data were collected by means of a questionnaire that included information about sociodemographic variables, work-related variables, and clinical variables. The prevalence of low back pain was higher among ICU nurses than among medical-surgical nurses. There were no significant differences between the two groups regarding the prevalence of risk factors for low back pain.
