‘Charity commissioner meant to supervise, not enforce morality’

Urvi Mahajani
MUMBAI

Holding that the Charity Commissioner's powers are meant for supervision and not for enforcing moral accountability, the Bombay High Court quashed an order directing a Nashik-based school to publish a public apology in two widely circulated newspapers.

The apology had been ordered after parents accused the school of misleading them by claiming that it was affiliated with the Central Board of Secondary Education (CBSE).

Justice Amit Borkar, on January 29, ruled that Section 41A of the Maharashtra Public Trusts Act gives the Charity Commissioner limited powers to oversee the financial and proprietary administration of public trusts. These powers, the court said, do not extend to addressing grievances that are unconnected with trust property or income.

Justice Borkar noted that if "proper administration" were

SECTION 41A
Allows the authority to ensure proper administration of trust property
Correct accounting of income
Application of funds towards trust objects interpreted in a moral sense, Section 41A would become "an open-ended source of authority, which the legislature has consciously avoided".

The court noted that in the present case, the complaint before the Charity Commissioner did not allege misuse of trust funds, illegal alienation of property, improper investments, failure to maintain statutory records, or breach of fiduciary duties. Instead, the grievance concerned the schools alleged misrepresentation about CBSE affiliation and its impact on parents and students.

The judge further said that directing the school to issue a public apology did not protect trust property, regulate trust income, or ensure statutory compliance. "Section 41A is thus a power of supervision and not of moral correction. Its purpose is to preserve the financial and proprietary aspect of public trusts," the court said.

According to the school, its managing body, RB Bohora Educational & Welfare Trust, was registered in 1998 and permitted to establish New Era English School in 1999. The school obtained SSC Board affiliation in 2002. In 2004, following requests from parents, the trust sought CBSE affiliation, but the CBSE rejected the application after an inspection in February 2009, as well as a subsequent appeal.

Based on these facts, some parents approached the Charity Commissioner, Nashik. The High Court, however, quashed the June 28, 2010 order directing the school to publish a public apology.

More than 1,600 CCTV cameras, 6 police teams help solve abduction case of 3mth-old baby

Hint of baby's sock in CCTV footage helped mom identify her and put the police on the abductor's trail

Fariyal Sayyed
THANE

In a case where crucial leads repeatedly hit dead ends, it was a tiny detail – a toddler's sock – along with footage from nearly 1,600 CCTV cameras that helped the Mumbai police crack the kidnapping of a three-month-old baby girl. The six-day operation led to the arrest of three accused and the safe rescue of the infant.

The incident occurred on January 22 at around 6pm, when complainant Farzana Mansuri, 23, a resident of Kausa, Mumbai, was crossing Khadi Machine Road near DCB Bank with her two daughters. An unknown woman wearing a burqa initiated a conversation, took Mansuri's three-month-old daughter, Afia Khatoun, in her lap, and fled. A kidnapping case was registered under Section 137(2) of the Bharatiya Nyaya Sanhita.

Baby's sock became clue

Initial CCTV footage from the crime scene showed the burqa-clad woman leaving the area in an auto-rickshaw towards Mumbai railway station. Police teams began tracking her movements through CCTV cameras across stations on the Mumbra-CSMT-Vangani route.

While reviewing footage, officers noticed a sock peeping out from beneath the burqa, worn on the baby's foot. This proved to be a crucial identifying detail.

"Our teams re-scanned the footage and noticed another burqa-clad woman. Though the toddler was fully covered, a few inches of the baby's socks were visible, based on which the mother identified her child," said a senior police officer.

At Mumbai railway station, the woman was seen handing over the baby to a couple before leaving the station. The couple later alighted at Thane railway station, changed the cloth wrapping the baby, and the woman altered her veil in an apparent attempt to mislead investigators.

Baby traced to Akola, 3 arrested

During further scrutiny, the police identified a third suspicious burqa-clad woman exiting Mumbai station. Acting on local intelligence, police detained her from the Ishannagar area. She was identified as Nasreen Ilaq Shaikh.

During interrogation, Shaikh revealed that the baby had been sent to Khetri village in Patur taluka of Akola district. A police team immediately proceeded to Akola and conducted a raid, safely rescuing baby Afia. Two more accused – Mohammad Gulab, 31, and his wife Khairunnisa, 30 – were arrested from the location.

Commendable work

Senior officials including Joint Commissioner of Police Datta Nalawade, Additional Commissioner of Police Ashok Dudhe, Deputy Commissioner of Police Ganesh Gawde, Assistant Commissioner of Police (Mumbra Division) Parag Agawane, Senior Police Inspector Anil Shinde, Police Inspector (Crime) Babasaheb Pawar, Assistant Police Inspector Vishal Mane, and the entire police team were commended for their efforts.

Know how it works before getting married

Sex matters

Dr Hetal Gosalia

Is it true that if men ejaculate 21 times in a month the chances of getting prostate cancer will be less?

SI, Matunga
Research suggests that more often men ejaculate, the less likely they are to have the disease. That's because your prostate, the small gland located below your bladder and in front of your rectum, adds fluids to your semen. The muscles of your prostate also help force your semen into your urethra and out of your body when you have an orgasm. Ejaculations can be through masturbation, nocturnal emissions or intercourse; it doesn't matter. Healthy sex life and masturbation help the prostate maintain its function with enough blood flow. There is no such universal dictum that men ejaculating 21 times in a month decreases chances of prostate cancer. Yes, high ejaculation frequency indeed is linked to a decreased risk of prostate cancer. Example: Compared to men who reported ejaculating three to four times per month, men who ejaculated more, say 21 times a month, enjoyed lower risk.

I am a 26-year-old woman and getting married in March. I know nothing about sex. Are there any online sex counselling sites?

UN, Andheri
First and foremost, congratulations! It is wise to know about sex before getting married. Sex is not just about intercourse; it forms the base in grounding a relationship and is a pillar of a happy and satisfied married life. It will be of great help if you meet a sexologist who will guide you step by step and help you clear your doubts/queries like: fear of insertion of the penis in the vagina, hymen tear, bleeding, pregnancy, etc. You should also know about how erection happens, what ejaculation is, penis' size, etc. You can read on: <https://www.mydoctortells.com/pmsa>

I am a single mother who has a 36-year-old unmarried daughter. She refuses to get married, but I have often espied her masturbating in her room. I am worried. Please advise.

GB, Marol
Oh please, take it easy. I agree you might be concerned about your daughter. But she is 36 years old i.e. a full blown woman herself. We all have sex desires, whether married or unmarried. Masturbation is nothing but 'having sex with oneself'. It is absolutely normal physiologically. It rather helps her have her hormones balanced and release her stress, if any. Masturbation gives a kick of happy hormones. The endorphins fill each and every cell of the body with peace and bliss. Relating to her refusal of getting married, you need to talk to her, listen and understand her views unconditionally. It can be her avoidance or disinterest due to some personal reasons. You can take help of a counsellor to whom she can talk to without being judged. Request you to stand by her, thus accepting her decision whatsoever.
