Ukraine keeps initiative, claims it reached Russian border

AP BY KHARKIV

Ukraine kept the counter-offensive momentum in its war against Russia going Monday, saying it liberated one village after another and claiming that in one region it pushed the invaders back right up to the border.

"In some areas of the front, our defenders reached the state border with the Russian Federation," said the regional governor of the north-eastern Kharkiv region, Oleh Synchubov. Russian troops crossed the border in the region on Feb. 24, the first day of the invasion.

As throughout the war, such military claims were hard to verify independently.

After Sunday's attacks by Russia on power stations and other infrastructure that knocked out electricity in many places across Ukraine, Kyiv authorities said that electric power and water supplies have been restored to some 80 percent in the Kharkiv region.

"You are heroes!!!", wrote Kharkiv mayor Ihor Tereshchuk early in the morning on Telegram, highlighting the ebullient mood in the region that has endured more than 200 days of war and occupation. "Thanks to everyone who did everything possible on this most difficult night for Kharkiv to normalize the life of the city as soon as possible."

The General Staff of the Armed Forces of Ukraine said that its troops had liberated more than 20 settlements within the last day.

The buoyant mood was also captured by a defiant President Volodymyr Zelenskyy on social media late Sunday, comments that immediately went viral.

"Do you still think you can intimidate, break us, force us to make concessions? Did you really not understand anything? Don't understand who we are? What we stand for? What we are talking about," Zelenskyy exhorted.

"Lead my lips," he continued. "Cold, hunger, darkness and thirst for us are not as scary and deadly as your friendship and brotherhood."

He added: "We will be with gas, lights, water and food... and WITHOUT you!"

The turn of events and all-important reversal of initiative was backed up by international observers who warned of the times ahead for Russian troops. It stood in sharp contrast to the first days of the war when Russian troops were moving toward Kyiv's doorstep.

"In the face of Ukrainian advances, Russia has likely ordered the withdrawal of its troops from the entirety of occupied Kharkiv Oblast west of the Oskil River," the British defense ministry said Monday, signaling a major advance that Kyiv, "Ukraine has recaptured territory at least twice the size of Greater London," it said.

The British said that likely will further deteriorate the trust Russian forces have in their commanders. Ukraine's initial move on the southern Kherson area, drawing the attention of enemy troops there, before pouncing on more depleted Russian lines in the northeast beyond Kharkiv has been seen as a great military move so far.

Even around Kherson, Russia is struggling to bring forces across the Dnipro River to stop the Ukrainian offensive there, the British military said.

It added: "The rapid Ukrainian successes have significant implications for Russia's overall operational design. The majority of the force in Ukraine is highly likely being forced to prioritize emergency defensive actions."

The Washington-based Institute for the Study of War said Monday that Russia likely lacks the reserve forces it needs to bolster its defenses in Ukraine.

While the war likely will stretch into next year, the Institute believes that "Ukraine has turned the tide of this war in its favor" by effectively using Western-supplied weapons like the long-range HIMARS missile system and strong battlefield tactics. "Kyiv will likely increasingly dictate the location and nature of the major fighting."

Seeking to contain its loss of momentum, Russia fired missiles at power plants and other critical infrastructure, immediately meeting with Ukrainian and U.S. criticism for centering on civilian targets.

The bombardment ignited a massive fire at a power station on Kharkiv's western outskirts and killed at least one person. Zelenskyy denounced the "deliberate and cynical missile strikes" against civilian targets as acts of terrorism.

"Russia's apparent response to Ukraine liberating cities and villages in the east: sending missiles to attempt to destroy critical civilian infrastructure," U.S. Ambassador to Ukraine Bridget A. Brink wrote.

Separately, the Zaporizhzhia Nuclear Power Plant in the Russia-occupied south completely shut down in a bid to prevent a radiation disaster as fighting raged nearby.

Rafael Grossi, the director-general of the International Atomic Energy Agency, made his proposal last week after leading a team of inspectors to the nuclear plant, Europe's biggest with six reactors, but gave few details at the time.

"What we need here really is Ukraine and Russia to agree on a very simple principle of not attacking, or not shelling, at the plant," Grossi told reporters at the agency's Vienna headquarters.

The IAEA has not assigned blame for recent shelling, for which Ukraine and Russia have blamed each other.

The plant has been occupied by Russian forces but operated by its Ukrainian employees since early in the war.

Pressed on whether his proposal includes demilitarization, Grossi said: "Basically, it's a commitment that no military action will include or will imply aiming... at the plant, or a radius that could be affecting its normal operation."

Grossi said of the two sides that he has "seen signs that they are interested in this agreement." He added that technical details are being explored, including the radius that an accord would apply to and how IAEA experts would work.

Two IAEA experts remain at the plant after the rest of Grossi's team returned home.

"What I see... is two sides that are engaging with us, but that are asking questions, lots of questions," he added. He said that "we try to keep it simple, we try to keep it practical, because we need it as soon as possible."

The Zaporizhzhia plant was reconnected to Ukraine's electricity grid at the weekend, allowing engineers to shut down its last operational reactor in an attempt to avoid disaster as fighting rages in the area.

Russia's troops from a number of territory it had occupied in the northeast.

The bombardment on Sunday ignited a massive fire at a power station on Kharkiv's western outskirts and killed at least one person, President Volodymyr Zelenskyy denounced the "deliberate and cynical missile strikes" against civilian targets as acts of terrorism.

Ukraine's second-largest city of Kharkiv appeared to be without power Sunday night. Cars drove through darkened streets, and a few pedestrians used flashlights or mobile phones to light their way.

Separately, the Zaporizhzhia Nuclear Power Plant in the Russian-occupied south completely shut down in a bid to prevent a radiation disaster as fighting raged nearby.

Kyiv's action in recent days to reclaim Russia-occupied areas in the Kharkiv region forced Moscow to withdraw its troops to prevent them from being surrounded, leaving behind significant numbers of weapons and munitions in a hasty flight as the war marked its 200th day on Sunday.

Ukraine's military chief, Gen. Valerii Zaluzhnyi, said its forces had recaptured about 3,000 square kilometers (1,160 square miles) since in early September.

He said Ukrainian troops are only 50 kilometers (about 30 miles) from the Russian border.

of more than 40 settlements in the region.

In Sunday night's missile attacks by Russia, the Kharkiv and Donetsk regions seemed to bear the brunt. Zaporizhzhia and Sumy had only partially lost power, Zelenskyy said.

Kharkiv Mayor Ihor Tereshchuk called the power-outage "revenge by the Russian aggressor for the successes of our army at the front, in particular, in the Kharkiv region."

Ukraine officials said Russia hit Kharkiv TEC-5, the country's second-biggest heat and power plant, and Zelenskyy posted video of the Kharkiv power plant on fire.

"Russian terrorists remain terrorists and attack critical infrastructure. No military facilities, only the goal of leaving people without light and heat," he tweeted.

The European countries "have made proposals, and there is no reason now for Iran not to agree to these proposals, but we have to take note of the fact that this isn't the case, so it certainly won't happen soon, although it looked for a while like it would," Scholz said.

"We remain patient, but we also remain clear: Iran must be prevented from being able to deploy nuclear weapons."

The United States unilaterally pulled out of the accord in 2018 under then President Donald Trump and reimposed sanctions on Iran, prompting Tehran to start backing away from the deal's terms.

Iran earlier this month responded to a final draft of a roadmap for parties to return to the tattered nuclear deal.

A probe by the International Atomic Energy Agency into man-made uranium particles found at three undeclared sites in the country has become a key sticking point in the talks for renewing the agreement.

Iran's hard-line president, Ebrahim Raisi, has said that the IAEA investigation into the issue must be halted in order for the 2015 deal to be renewed.

The IAEA, the UN nuclear watchdog agency, has for years sought answers from Iran to its questions about the particles.

US intelligence agencies, Western nations and the IAEA have said Iran ran an organized nuclear weapons program until 2003. Iran long has denied ever seeking nuclear weapons.
