

SHIVA GLOBAL AGRO INDUSTRIES LTD.

'Shiva House', New Mondha, Nanded - 431 602 (M.S.)

Tel.: 02462 - 284036, 284039 * Fax : 02462 - 284729

E-mail : shivaagro1@gmail.com * Web : www.shivaagro.org

CIN : L24120MH1993PLC070334

Ref. No. :

Date: 13/10/2017

To BSE Limited,
Phiroze Jeejeebhoy Towers,
Dala Street, Fort,
Mumbai - 400001.

Company Code: 530433

Sub: Compliance Certificate Under Regulation 7(3) of the SEBI (Listing

Handwritten signature in blue ink.

the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are aged 65 and over has increased by 1.5 million, and the number of people aged 75 and over has increased by 1.2 million (Office for National Statistics 2000). The number of people aged 65 and over is projected to increase to 6.5 million by 2020, and the number of people aged 75 and over to 4.5 million (Office for National Statistics 2000).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the health and social care needs of older people. The Department of Health (2000) has set out a strategy for the NHS to meet the needs of older people. The strategy is based on three main principles: (1) to ensure that older people have access to the services they need; (2) to ensure that older people are treated with respect and dignity; and (3) to ensure that older people are able to live independently and actively. The strategy is being implemented through a number of measures, including: (1) increasing the number of health and social care professionals who specialise in the care of older people; (2) improving the training and skills of health and social care professionals; and (3) developing new services and facilities for older people.

One of the key challenges in implementing the strategy is to ensure that older people have access to the services they need. This is particularly true for people who live in rural areas, where there are often fewer health and social care services available. The Department of Health (2000) has set out a number of measures to address this challenge, including: (1) increasing the number of health and social care services in rural areas; (2) improving the transport links between rural areas and health and social care services; and (3) developing new services and facilities for older people in rural areas.

Another key challenge is to ensure that older people are treated with respect and dignity. This is particularly true for people who are living in care homes, where they may be treated as objects rather than as individuals. The Department of Health (2000) has set out a number of measures to address this challenge, including: (1) improving the standards of care in care homes; (2) increasing the number of health and social care professionals who work in care homes; and (3) developing new services and facilities for older people in care homes.

Finally, a key challenge is to ensure that older people are able to live independently and actively. This is particularly true for people who are living alone, where they may lack the support and assistance they need. The Department of Health (2000) has set out a number of measures to address this challenge, including: (1) increasing the number of health and social care services that provide support and assistance to older people; (2) improving the training and skills of health and social care professionals; and (3) developing new services and facilities for older people.

In conclusion, the Department of Health (2000) has set out a strategy for the NHS to meet the needs of older people. The strategy is based on three main principles: (1) to ensure that older people have access to the services they need; (2) to ensure that older people are treated with respect and dignity; and (3) to ensure that older people are able to live independently and actively. The strategy is being implemented through a number of measures, including: (1) increasing the number of health and social care professionals who specialise in the care of older people; (2) improving the training and skills of health and social care professionals; and (3) developing new services and facilities for older people.

One of the key challenges in implementing the strategy is to ensure that older people have access to the services they need. This is particularly true for people who live in rural areas, where there are often fewer health and social care services available. The Department of Health (2000) has set out a number of measures to address this challenge, including: (1) increasing the number of health and social care services in rural areas; (2) improving the transport links between rural areas and health and social care services; and (3) developing new services and facilities for older people in rural areas.

Another key challenge is to ensure that older people are treated with respect and dignity. This is particularly true for people who are living in care homes, where they may be treated as objects rather than as individuals. The Department of Health (2000) has set out a number of measures to address this challenge, including: (1) improving the standards of care in care homes; (2) increasing the number of health and social care professionals who work in care homes; and (3) developing new services and facilities for older people in care homes.

Finally, a key challenge is to ensure that older people are able to live independently and actively. This is particularly true for people who are living alone, where they may lack the support and assistance they need. The Department of Health (2000) has set out a number of measures to address this challenge, including: (1) increasing the number of health and social care services that provide support and assistance to older people; (2) improving the training and skills of health and social care professionals; and (3) developing new services and facilities for older people.