Trump Enlists Top Business Titansto Boost Image Domestically & Globally

AGENCY

WASHINGTON: President Donald Trump's recent trip to the Middle East was not just a diplomatic tour; it also became a business spectacle, with major American corporate leaders closely shadowing the president. Nvidia's CEO, along with oil executives, bankers, and other top business figures, followed Trump's route across the Gulf, signaling a shift in how U.S. business elites engage with the White House. bia, Qatar, and the United Arab Emirates, illustrating the importance they place on maintaining close ties with the president, especially given his aggressive use of tariffs. Trump highlighted his role as a national promoter during the trip, stating, "I have to be a cheerleader for our country," while contrasting his approach with that of his predecessor, Joe Biden. Host nations and the White House hastily organized business conferences to spotlight Trump's dealmaking, with executives signing partnership agreements and highlighting investments as much for the public spectacle as for actual economic impact.
