FORMER RBI GOVERNOR SLAMS US OVER FOREIGN STUDENT CURBS

Rajan warns of talent drain in US

SWATI PANDEY
May 28

FORMER RESERVE BANK OF India governor Raghuram Rajan warned about the long-term risks to the US economy if politics eroded the pipeline of international students to American universities. In an interview with Bloomberg TV on Wednesday, Rajan cautioned that foreign student inflows have historically been a cornerstone of US innovation and economic leadership, but that current policies risk unravelling this advantage.

"The Sergey Brins of the world came as students and did wonders for the US economy," Rajan said, pointing to one of the founders of Google. "To some extent, the problem is the universities haven't made the case that they are so central to US growth, but also central to the distribution

RAGHURAM RAJAN,
FORMER RBI GOVERNOR
The Sergey Brins of the world came as students and did wonders for the US economy of that growth." Rajan, who is professor of finance at the University of Chicago Booth School of Business, warned that squeezing foreign students could impact job growth, noting that companies like Alphabet's Google employ thousands, thanks in part to immigration-linked talent pipelines.

At the heart of Rajan's concerns is the ongoing battle between the White House and universities — one that initially centred on elite schools such as Harvard University and Columbia University over antisemitism — but that's morphed into a larger attack over the role of US higher education. On Tuesday, the Trump administration escalated that fight further by ordering US embassies worldwide to stop scheduling interviews for student visas as it weighs stricter vetting of applicants' social-media profiles.

"It's not a great environment," Rajan said, citing rising fears among academics and administrators over visa security and retaliation from the White House. "It's an environment which is inhibiting the ultimate production that the universities contribute to the US economy."

International students accounted for 5.9% of the total US higher education population of almost 19 million. In the 2023-2024, more than 1.1 million foreign students came to the US, with India sending the most, followed by China. Rajan also drew a parallel between the decisions foreign students now face and the investment choices businesses make amid uncertainty. BLOOMBERG

GAURAV MUNJAL, CO-FOUNDER AND CEO, UNACADEMY

The eternal student

WHILE EDTECH LEADERS ADAPT AMID FUNDING WINTER & BACK-TO-CLASSROOM SHIFT, GAURAV MUNJAL HOLDS INVESTOR LEVERAGE WITH CASH STILL IN THE BANK

ANEES HUSSAIN

IF ALL OF INDIA'S edtech founders from the past decade were students in the same classroom, they would have had some hard lessons etched into their notebooks. The sector's post-Covid exam was brutal, with the curriculum changing faster than anyone could prepare for. The funding winter and a return to physical classrooms rewrote the rules overnight, forcing edtech bosses to take tough decisions.

If Vedantu slashed jobs to stay afloat, upGrad pivoted to corporate skilling and Byju Raveendran of Byju's, once the class topper with a $22 billion empire, was forced out in a messy boardroom battle. Amid the mayhem, Gaurav Munjal, co-founder and CEO of Unacademy, managed to scrape through, holding some leverage with investors with cash still in the bank.

Munjal is reportedly planning to exit his operational role at Unacademy in the next 2-3 months. Along with co-founder Roman Saini, he is said to be in advanced discussions with the board and investors to spin off Unacademy's language learning app AirLearn into a separate company.

While the deal nitty-gritty is yet to be finalised — including whether Munjal (3.39%) and co-founder Roman Saini (3.41%) will continue to hold their stakes in the company or cash in to re-invest in AirLearn — what is clear is that the founders have emerged in a position of relative strength. As someone who worked closely with Munjal says, "his willingness to own up to his mistakes has ensured survival".

He was never a pushover. By the time Munjal sat down with FE for an interview in January, he was well into executing a plan to downsize aggressively, a mandate that might have been forced by the board but one he executed with precision. He undertook performance-based job cuts across the organisation. The company reduced its workforce by approximately 70% — to 1,754 by January 2025 from its peak of around 5,850 employees, according to Tracxn data. Each round was precisely targeted — sales teams missing targets, underperforming categories, redundant functions — creating the operational efficiency that helped preserve ₹1,200 crore in cash reserves.

On the online front, he shut down underperforming units like Mastree and SwiftLearn in K-12, while focusing on profitable segments like Prepladder and Grapy. Despite his longstanding reservations about offline education, he made what now seems a necessary compromise — a pivot to a hybrid model. "When we launched in 2015, offline wasn't even on our radar," he had said in January.

As market demands shifted, Munjal adapted, trimming segments to a size where they had a better shot at profitability. "We shut down categories like SSC and state PSC exams, focusing instead on long-tail categories like JEE, UPSC, CA, and CAT," he explained. The move led to a 20% de-growth in online test prep in 2024 but pushed the business closer to profitability.

In 2024, offline contributed 40% of Unacademy's revenue, with a 60-70% occupancy rate. Despite fierce criticism for the layoffs and the track-change, the financials looked compelling: "Two years ago, we were burning ₹1,400 crore annually. That's been reduced to ₹300 crore in 2024, and we expect to bring it below ₹100 crore in 2025," he said earlier this year. "By 2026, we should be profitable. Prepladder and Grapy have been highly successful and profitable. We still have ₹1,200 crore cash in the bank."

Munjal has done what the board needed: made Unacademy leaner, Prepladder and Grapy profitable, and offline centres viable despite his early reluctance. And when AirLearn showed growth — 70,000 daily active users and a $2 million annualised revenue run rate by April 2025 — he has chosen to exit with it.

Sumit Jain inherits a business that has a good chance at profitability. "Offline is fundamentally a utilisation business — slow growth, consistent delivery, and efficiency are the only ways to win here," Munjal had said in January.

In an edtech landscape littered with dropouts, his exit proves a valuable lesson — that sometimes the best way to survive is to start all over again. Whether AirLearn becomes his next A+ or a tough retest is yet to be seen, but his story could be a playbook for founders who are faced with the dilemma of quitting or staying on to fight it out.
