THE BIG IDEA

PRACTO

Medical access goes off the beaten track

PRACTO STARTED OFF BY DIGITISING ADMINISTRATIVE TASKS FOR DOCTORS; 16 YEARS LATER IT’S BECOME A ONE-STOP SHOP FOR ONLINE HEALTHCARE CONSULTATION

S SHANTHI

PRACTO’S CO-FOUNDER Abhinav Lal’s love affair with computers started in 1998 when his school in Jharkhand set up a computer lab. The time spent at the lab convinced him that a career in computers and mathematics was something up his street. But to his surprise, he couldn’t get into any good coaching institute for IIT entrance preparation. So, after grade 12, he chose the next best option available and took admission in NITK Surathkal in 2005. This is where he met Shashank ND, now co-founder and CEO of Practo.

In the first year of college, Lal and Shashank joined the entrepreneurship club ‘Euphoria’. The first activity that was organised by the club was a visit to the Indian School of Business, Hyderabad, for an event where one of the key speakers was Ajit Balakrishnan, founder of Rediff. “We loved when he talked about building a product and a company,” Lal says. That led the duo to organise more such events.

In the process, they also understood the nuances of building a company from scratch. The college also had a club called NITK STEP that focused on fostering entrepreneurship and innovation among students. Lal and Shashank, both in their third year of B.Tech, and a bunch of friends started building products as part of this club in 2008. But, almost all of those products were “utter failures”. This was also the time the public market crash had happened.

Around this time, Shashank’s father had a surgery, for which he had to visit multiple doctors across multiple hospitals, exposing him to the huge gaps in the healthcare sector. Doctors were still using pen and paper to keep medical records, bills, etc. The founders saw an opportunity there, and, by the end of 2008, built a software that could help doctors manage their practices digitally, a platform which today people know as Practo. It was a cost-efficient cloud-based healthcare software that digitised and streamlined administrative tasks for healthcare providers, such as appointment scheduling, billing, and inventory management. The product was an instant hit.

However, the founders weren’t happy as they thought “it was a very badly built one”. In January 2009, they decided to rebuild it from the ground up. The newly-built software was showcased a few months later at a large dental conference in Bengaluru. The duo had worked 15-16 hours a day prepping for the event, but day one was a disaster as no one showed up.

But Lady Luck smiled the next day. A doctor bought it and 100 others showed interest in buying it. The next task Abhinav had was to convince his mother to allow him to do business. Once she agreed, the founders called a few of their friends to join in and started running Practo from Shashank’s house in JP Nagar, Bengaluru. This was in July 2009. The company was registered and named Practo by then. “The word Practo came from practice automation,” he explains. They also hired their first set of employees — students from their college and the RV College of Engineering. The next two years “were a blur” — making rounds to clinics, selling and improving the product and repeating it every single day. While Lal and two others wrote code, Shashank and the rest was out on the road — selling.

By the end of 2009, Practo had around 500 customers in Bengaluru and created a simple expansion strategy. One person from the team would move to a city, sell the product, and if it worked, he would set up a small team there. Then the next person would go to the next city. So on and so forth.

Within no time, Practo expanded to Chennai and Mumbai. By 2010, they had roughly 1,500-2,000 customers. Today, close to 85% of its revenues come from India business and the rest from international markets, where it has been providing software to hospitals and clinics for 10+ years and recently launched its doctor discovery marketplace platform in the UAE.

Practo was bootstrapped till 2011. Before that, it was part of Morpheus Accelerator, through which it met a bunch of investors. In 2012, it raised its first funding of ₹25 crore from Sequoia. “We still have the screenshot of a bank account showing the newly infused money.” The firm has raised a total of $228.85 million in funding across six funding rounds to date.

By 2012, Practo had 30 employees and 10,000 customers (doctors). They had reached the point where they could build what they originally wanted to — a consumer-facing app. After they got doctors online, made them use technology and open up their calendars, it was time to make healthcare better for consumers. “The last 10 years have all been about plugging the gaps.”

Today, Practo’s B2B vertical focuses on software solutions for hospitals and clinics, while B2C offers doctor discovery and appointment booking for minor to major ailments, 24x7 online consultations, along with subscription-based health plans.

The PeakXV-backed digital healthcare company is looking to go public soon and reported its first full-year profit in FY25, driven by 25-30% YoY growth in its core business.

Kambli part of Yorkshire folklore, ex-teammates worry about him

SANDEEP DWIVEDI
Leeds, June 29

IN YORKSHIRE THEY still remember Vinod Kambli, the next big Indian batsman of the 90s who now epitomises the frightful consequences of young cricketers failing to handle fame and fortune. The time Sachin Tendulkar earned the right to be the first overseas cricketer to call Headingley his home county and hit global headlines, his friend Kambli, yet to make his Test debut, was playing for a small club around there, making waves and friends for life.

Many years later, those who played with him and against the mercurial stroke maker here back in the day, have read media reports about his alcohol addiction, watched his struggles to speak in interviews, keep asking that one question: “What happened to Kambli?”

Nasa Hussain is the head groundsman at Park Avenue ground in Bradford, an area dominated by those with roots in Pakistan and India. From Mirpur in Pakistan, he once bowled to Kambli. Nasa, like Kambli, is in his 50s now. In the early 90s, they were young cricketers with dreams.

Kambli was 19 but he had the swagger of a Test veteran. “As a South Asian, Sachin joining Yorkshire was big news. I’ll tell you what was better, he brought along with him his friend Vinod Kambli, who played in our league. I’ve never-ever met a person who hits the ball as hard as he used to,” he says.

Nasa still remembers the first ball he bowled to him. “He just runs down the track and hits the first ball for six, and you think, ‘well okay’. Young man from India, never seen before, never heard of before, and he just comes and smashes it. Subsequently, he went on to score two double-hundreds against England. That was some talent,” he says before seamlessly switching to a rueful tone. “In today’s day and age, that guy would have been a multi-millionaire.”

Kambli is part of Yorkshire’s folklore, he is that enigmatic character, whose life story provokes both disbelief and regret. As with all colourful characters, it is the anecdotes that act as bricks in the building of a myth. Solly Adam, the man responsible for hosting and bringing close to 400 sub-continent players to England, has many of them.

He isn’t an agent but a businessman with passion for cricket and kindness. He was also the captain of the team that Kambli played for. At one point, Solly was playing host to about 10 to 15 Indian cricketers at his home. Many were staying there; others had made a habit of dropping by for meals. With the money from the club not much, most had day jobs — some working at Solly’s fuel station, factory or shopping centre. Over to Solly.

“One day we were sitting, 10 cricketers. All of them had part-time jobs except for Vinod and Sachin. So a cricketer from Mumbai asked Vinod - ‘Since you only earn 25 pound a match, why don’t you work at one of Solly’s places? Kambli didn’t think for a minute, pat came his reply: ‘Me and Sachin will make money playing Test cricket, I don’t want to divert my attention doing part-time jobs.’ That was exceptional, what confidence. He was very young, far from being a Test batsman but he had the confidence,” recalls Solly.

Solly says he has dedicated a chapter on Kambli in his book Beyond Boundaries. It’s a treasure trove of cricketing yarns that makes Kambli’s batting flamboyance and his rocky life beyond the field jump out of the pages.

It was on the advice of his friend, the great Sunil Gavaskar, that Solly had signed Kambli for Spen Victoria cricket club. When the Mumbai boy landed at the club, he didn’t make a great first impression. Kambli was a frail teenager, his frame didn’t give any hint of a hard-hitter hidden inside him. “His arms are like chicken legs,” said one member.
