LANXESS takes action to counter weak market environment

Ahmedabad, A weak global market environment impacted LANXESS' results in the second quarter of 2025. The specialty chemicals company achieved an EBITDA of EUR 150 million, which is a 17.1 percent decline compared with the figure of EUR 181 million from the same quarter last year. Weaker demand in general was accompanied by lower sales volumes in all segments. The sale of the Urine Analyzers business unit effective April 1, 2025, also contributed significantly to the decline in earnings. Second-quarter sales amounted to EUR 1,466 billion, down 12.6 percent on the prior-year figure of EUR 1,678 billion. "The economic environment has deteriorated significantly again in recent months. Additionally, ongoing tariff discussions with the U.S. are causing considerable market uncertainty and a difficult situation for the European chemical industry. There is currently no improvement in sight for the economic situation, says Matthias Zacher, CEO of LANXESS. "For us, this means continuing to focus fully on achieving the best possible positioning in the market, as well as in terms of cost efficiency and processes. When the economy picks up again, we will be ready and able to meet the additional demand much more efficiently and profitably." The EBITDA margin per exceptional was 10.2 percent in the second quarter, compared with 10.8 percent in the same period last year. (1-7)

How Russia-Ukraine war is Europe's battle for relevance

For more than three and a half years, Europe has lived in the shadow of the Russia-Ukraine war. The invasion that began in February 2022 shattered decades of assumptions about stability on the continent. It forced Europe to scramble for energy security, spend billions on defence, and rethink the very foundations of its alliance with the US. Now, as negotiations between the US and Russia gather momentum, Europe faces its sternest test since the Cold War: how to secure peace in Ukraine without surrendering its principles. How to handle an unpredictable US President, besides redefining Nato for a new era.

Negotiations at the Crossroads
Talks between Russia and the US have reopened a difficult reality. Russia has hinted it may accept Nato-style "security guarantees" for Ukraine, but with strings attached: recognition of Russian control over Donetsk and possibly other occupied regions, and guarantees that Ukraine will not host Western forces on its soil. Donald Trump, eager to present himself as a dealmaker, has warned Kyiv that Crimea and Nato membership may be permanently off the table. We also need to recall that Trump is looking for early signs to influence his Nobel Prize credentials. For Europe, this is alarming. Since 2014, the EU's guiding principle has been "nothing about Ukraine without Ukraine". Any settlement imposed from above risks Ukraine being denied dignity, sovereignty and security. While the US and Russia may see transactional value in carving out zones of influence in the region, Europe knows it will ultimately bear the consequences. The stakes for Europe
Europe has paid dearly for this war. Billions of euros have gone into arming and sustaining Ukraine, while EU export divisions, and weathered higher energy costs and disrupted trade. The entire ammunition arsenal of Nato countries has been fired by Russia, consolidating its hold over Ukraine territory, it could later push further, testing Nato's eastern flank from the Baltics to Poland. For countries like Estonia or Lithuania, the idea that Ukraine could be sacrificed sets a dangerous precedent, at least for the long term.

Peace would allow Europe to redirect defence spending toward rebuilding while reopening trade routes through the Black Sea and reducing reliance on costly alternatives to Russian gas. However, a fragile peace won't do; the risks would be too many. Europe's post-Cold War identity has rested on enlargement, integration, and the promise of stability for its eastern neighbours. Ukraine embodies that project. Losing Ukraine to Russian dominance would stymie Europe's strategic vision.

Internal European Divisions
Europe's unity is real but fragile. Eastern members such as Poland, the Baltic States, and the Czech Republic insist that only full Ukrainian accession can guarantee continental security. Germany and France, though supportive of Kyiv, also weigh domestic economic pressures and the fear of escalation. Southern European states worry about Mediterranean security being overshadowed. This diversity of perspectives complicates bargaining position. It needs political clarity and economic sustainability to ensure "European line", Moscow will exploit divisions, and Washington under Trump may pursue bilateral arrangements that sideline Europe. The Trump factor looms large. Nato remains dependent on US military power, especially in nuclear deterrence, long-range strike, and logistics. Any peace settlement will inevitably involve Washington.
