Antibiotic-resistant strep throat inches closer to reality

NEW YORK: Scientists have discovered signs that the germ causing strep throat and flesh-eating disease may be moving closer to resistance to penicillin and other related antibiotics known as beta-lactams. In a study published in the Journal of Clinical Microbiology, the scientists described strains of group A streptococcus that are less susceptible to commonly used antibiotics. According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) in the US, group A streptococcus causes 20-30 per cent of sore throats in children and 5-15 per cent of sore throats in adults.

Your signature can be telling

Your signature can display your destiny on paper. A signature is the reflection of your personality and the mirror of your soul. Your signature style can reveal a lot about your future and if your signature points towards something bad or negative, you can fix it by changing your signature style with the help of an expert. It is an indirect way of communication. The clearer and cleaner we sign, the clearer message we send to the universe. Our signature signifies our personality, our preferences, our social life, our choice of career and attitude towards life. It can also throw light on your financial status. How good are you at handling work pressures or how good or bad are you at tackling stress can also be checked via signature. There is nothing like a perfect signature. Signature analysis is a motor reflex (eye-hand) skill and the best way to learn any skill is to practice. Here are 10 simple rules and tricks which you can incorporate in your signature which will help enhance your progress and prosperity...

1. Write your full name and surname as it gives name, fame and identity.
2. The last alphabet should end upwards, it decreases the chances of financial losses.
3. To achieve progress in life you should sign at an angle of 45°.
4. Put complete underscore. For support in life.
5. Put two dots below underscore in the centre, it will increase your focus towards the present.
6. Join the first and second alphabet as it strengthens the bond with your spouse and your parents.
7. Do not add any dots after or in the middle of the name. It indicates obstacles.
8. The cleaner and clearer one signs, less tension, stress and problems in life.
9. Make an affidavit and attach to all necessary documents specially banks.
10. Practice new spell name and surname 108 Times for seven days on auspicious days and dates.

Miso & natto may cut mortality risk

Higher intake of fermented soy products, such as miso and natto, is associated with a lower risk of mortality, claims a study conducted in Japan. The findings, published in the British Medical Journal, should be interpreted with caution as they may have been affected by unmeasured factors, the researchers said. In Asian countries, especially Japan, several types of soy products are widely consumed, such as natto - soybeans fermented with Bacillus subtilis bacteria, miso or soybeans fermented with Aspergillus oryzae bacteria, and tofu or soybean curd. However, it is still unclear whether different soy products, especially fermented soy products, are associated with specific health effects, according to the researchers, including those from Osaka University Graduate School of Medicine in Japan. They analysed the association between several types of soy products and death from any cause, and from cancer, total cardiovascular disease, respiratory disease, and injury. The team based its findings on 42,750 men, and 50,165 women aged 45-74 years, who were taking part in a study based in 11 of Japan's public health centre areas.

It's not like your usual bandage...

AGENCIES/ Washington

Researchers have developed colour-changing bandages that can sense drug-resistant and drug-sensitive bacteria in wounds and treat them accordingly. According to the World Health Organization, antibiotic resistance is one of the biggest threats to global health. Sensing and treating bacterial infections earlier could help improve patients' recovery, as well as curb the spread of antibiotic-resistant microbes. The study was published in the journal ACS Central Science. Xiaogang Qu and colleagues developed a material that changes colour from green to yellow when it contacts the acidic microenvironment of a bacterial infection. In response, the material, which is incorporated into a bandage, releases an antibiotic that kills drug-sensitive bacteria.

Is lying the key to honesty?

A study found that people lie in order to appear more honest at events when they feel that their reputation is at stake, and may over tell the truth to prove themselves right

AGENCIES
Jerusalem

People may lie sometimes to appear honest if events that turned out in their favour seem too good to be true, according to a study. "Many people care greatly about their reputation and how they will be judged by others, and a concern about appearing honest may outweigh our desire to actually be honest, even in situations where it will cost us money to lie," said Shoham Choshen-Hillel, a senior lecturer at The Hebrew University of Jerusalem in Israel. "Our findings suggest that when people obtain extremely favourable outcomes, they anticipate other people's suspicious reactions, and prefer lying and appearing honest over telling the truth, and appearing as selfish liars," Choshen-Hillel said. The study, published in the Journal of Experimental Psychology: General, found similar findings about lying to appear honest in a series of experiments conducted with lawyers, and college students in Israel, as well as online participants in the US and UK. In one experiment with 115 lawyers in Israel, the participants were told to imagine a scenario where they told a client that a case would cost between 60 and 90 billable hours. The lawyer would be working in an office where the client wouldn't know how many hours were truly spent on the case. Half of the participants were told they had worked 60 hours on the case while the other half were told they worked 90 hours. Then they were asked how many hours they would bill the client. In the 60-hour group, the lawyers reported an average of 62.5 hours, with 17 per cent of the group lying to inflate their hours. In the 90-hour group, the lawyers reported an average of 88 hours, with 18 per cent of the group lying to report fewer hours than they had actually worked. When asked for an explanation for the hours they billed, some lawyers in the 90-hour group said they worried that the client would think he had been cheated because the lawyer had lied about the number of billable hours. There were similar findings in another online experiment with 544 participants in the UK. Choshen-Hillel believes the study findings would apply in the real world, but there could be situations where the amount of money or other high stakes would lead people to tell the truth even if they might appear dishonest.

Your spouse could be spying on you via smart speaker

AGENCIES
Toronto

More than hackers, people are worried about friends, family and others who can listen to their conversations via smart speakers, reveals new research. A survey by University of British Columbia (UBC) researchers in Canada found that people feared potential misuse of the device from people they actually live with and know. "They worried that their housemates could order stuff online, overhear private conversations or access other people's reminders, calendars and phone contacts," explained Konstantin Beznosov, a professor of electrical and computer engineering who specializes in cybersecurity at UBC. "Of course, they were aware these actions could well be unintentional — such as a child accidentally using the last-number-dialled feature to call up their parent's employer, for example." They found that participants not only worried about keeping their data safe from the manufacturer or other entities; they also feared potential misuse of the device from people they know. Interestingly, the nature of the concern depended on the participant's "mental model" or technical understanding of how smart speakers work, said study primary author Yue Huang, a PhD student in electrical and computer engineering.
